

No-cost weatherization services for limited income households

Pacific Power partners with local agencies to provide energy efficiency services to income eligible households. This includes homeowners and renters residing in single-family homes, manufactured homes and apartments. The agencies leverage our funding with federal and state grants so that these services are free to qualified households. The agencies audit homes to determine the cost-effective measures they will install. Measures available may include, but are not limited to: insulation, windows, infiltration reduction, showerheads, aerators, LED light bulbs and replacement refrigerators.

Income eligibility levels are tied to federal poverty guidelines and generally change annually. If your household obtained Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program (LIHEAP) energy assistance, it is likely you are income eligible for these weatherization services. LIHEAP is a federally funded program with monies allocated to help income eligible households cover home energy bills, and is administered by state and local agencies.
